November 2013 NCACHE News

College application season is in full swing and CFNC is here to help!

North Carolina College Application Week is November 18-22. The goal of College Application Week is to grant every high school senior the opportunity to apply to college. Special attention is paid to first-generation college students, as well as students who had not previously considered college.

During this college access event, all 110 North Carolina universities will accept the College Board fee waiver in place of an application fee, for qualifying students.

Additionally, 92 North Carolina colleges and universities waived their application fee for all North Carolina seniors, in 2012.

Last year was a record event for CFNC, with over 69,000 applications being submitted in just five days. Help CFNC set the mark even higher this year by encouraging all high school seniors to take advantage of College Application Week!

USA Today published an article about National College Application Week. Did you know North Carolina was the first state to have a College Application Week Program?!

NCACHE is committed to building strategic partnerships to strengthen our local communities through college access and success.
